Reminiscences of the Second Tennessee Cavalry.

BY LIEUT. JNO. W. ANDER.

—NO. X.

On the 23d day of September, 1863, the Second Cavalry left Chattanooga to guard a large wagon train across Walden's Ridge, and through to Bridgeport. The writer, together with Lieut. R. K. Luckett, of Co. A, with a small detachment, was detailed to cover the rear. The wagons were loaded with sick and wounded. The road winds around and up this lofty mountain, overlooking the entire country up and down the valley of the Tennessee. After our weary horses had borne their weary riders to the summit, we dismounted and enjoyed the much-appreciated luxury of a rest. It was about 9 o'clock a. m., and as bright a morning as one could wish to see. The view of the mountains of our lovely East Tennessee was sublime. We imagined that we could almost see the mountain homes of our childhood, the sport which of all others we loved the best covered over then with a pall of gloom and sadness. Our minds were naturally laden with anxieties about "home, sweet home." The thunder of artillery in the valley beneath, in the vicinity of Chattanooga, reverberated through the mountains surrounding us. The dust raised by the moving columns of Rosecrans and Bragg's great armies rose in clouds in the distance. Burnside was sending troops from the direction of Knoxville to reinforce R. K. Lee, while Grant was moving up from Mississippi. All these things augured hot work in the future and furnished food for the contemplation of the soldier.

We moved out in the direction of Sequatchie Valley, by way of Jasper, on to Bridgeport, where the railroad bridge had been destroyed and to which point our railroad trains were then running. The entire train was left and our train reloaded with supplies for the army around Chattanooga. We had about 200 wagons. We returned over the same route we had come, and as we were leaving the Confederate cavalry had crossed the Tennessee River, and happened to meet our train near Pikeville, and the entire train was captured. Gen. Wheeler's troops used what they could of our supplies, and burned the remainder. The miles which they didn't want were killed, and they left in the direction of McMinnville. Our regiment was yet about fifty miles down the valley, and we immediately started in pursuit of Wheeler, leaving Jasper on the morning of October 5th. We crossed the Cumberland Mountains on the 6th and followed on to McMinnville, where Wheeler's forces had preceded us and captured and destroyed everything of value that was stored to the government, only a small Federal force having been left there. The Second Cavalry was instructed to remain there until further orders. We found here a great many Union men. McMinnville is a lovely little town, beautifully situated. The writer will ever remember the kindness of such families as that of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Anderson. We remained here until October 27th, and had a pleasant time, with the exception of having to encounter a guerrilla force, which prowled around the country, and committed all sorts of depredations. They drove in our pickets on the night of the 22nd, and came yelling into town like wild men, and the Second was not to be taken by surprise, and they were easily repulsed.

We were relieved by the 19th Michigan, and went by way of Dayton to Pikeville, and from there to Washington, in Ettes county, at which place we arrived on the first day of November, and remained until the 15th. On the 19th we arrived at Kingston. On the night of the 23rd, Gen. Wheeler came down the Knoxville road to attack Kingston. The town was in camps on the old Knoxville road about two and a half miles out of Kingston. Wheeler came with a pretty heavy force and got in between us and town, before day light. The infantry had had us cut entirely off. Our only chance was to fight our way through. We soon ascertained his weakest point, made a bold front and dashed through his lines, with the principal force engaged with the infantry on the old Knoxville road, on the opposite side of the town, or rather on our right. We gained a strong position near the residence of Mr. Thomas Tipton. Lieut. Frank A. Little who was then in command of Company C, reached Tipton's house, where he and his command took refuge and boldly held their ground. The enemy made repeated attempts to drive them from their position, but were repulsed every time, by the gallant Lieutenant and his gallant men. The fight was kept up here from daylight until about 4 p. m., the enemy having made several successful charges. Lieut. Little and a few men were wounded, but none killed. The enemy left twenty-five dead on the field. The wounded were carried away. Our entire force at Kingston, at the time did not exceed 300 men. The infantry was commanded by Col. Byrd and did some gallant fighting. Gen. Wheeler had about 5,000 men.

On the 25th, Maj. W. R. McCall, with about 300 men, went out on the direction of Chattanooga, but ten miles above Kingston. Capt. Colles, of the First Tennessee Infantry, went with us. We soon ran into the enemy's pickets and captured about twenty-five prisoners. Capt. Colles was a brave and gallant officer.

On the 31st day of December we left Kingston, where we had been so kindly received and warmly welcomed by the noble people of that vicinity, and started on our way to Nashville.

From Bedford County.

HALEY'S STATION, March 7.

MR. EDITOR: Several months have elapsed since you have heard from "Old Bedford," hence I assume the responsibility of sending you another communication.

Haley's Station is a quiet little place, situated upon the N. & C. railroad, fifty-eight miles from Nashville, and ninety-three from Chattanooga. Considering the size of the place, a good business is done here.

Our rural district schools have opened for the spring. Private or subscription schools will be slimly attended, whilst those having a sufficient tax voted to maintain a ten months' free school will be unusually full.

Cupid has let fly his mystical darts and it appears that they have pierced the hearts of many of our ladies and gents since the holidays causing them to yield unreluctantly to his fascinating charms. I presume he did not except Knoxville in his rounds, inasmuch as one of our young men claimed a Knoxville girl as his fair bride. I allude to the marriage of Mr. James Koonce, of Haley's Station, to Miss Fannie Hoffer, of Knoxville. They are now at the residence of the groom's uncle, Maj. A. L. Landis. They contemplate removing to California in April next. Joy be with you, friends, wherever your lot may be cast. May peace attend you through all the vicissitudes of life, and may you at last gain a happy admittance into the Paradise above.

"Westward the star of empire takes its course." Until recently the tide of emigration from Bedford seemed to center upon the great State of Texas. We have lost a good many of our citizens who left us to make their future homes within the jurisdiction of the "Lone Star." Now the scales have turned. Away out in the far West comes the Macedonian cry eureka, inviting our citizens over into the sunny plains of California, where the orange and the myrtle grow together, undisturbed by the frosts of winter, but continually freshened by the gentle zephyrs of perpetual summer. Mr. Joe D. Biddle and wife, Messrs. Tom Biddle, Jeff. Stanfield and Geo. Landers started the first week in January for this earthly paradise; and at last accounts were well pleased. Several other families anticipate starting in April to make their future homes within this "golden State." "Chickens will come home to roost."

Since my last communication to the CHRONICLE the yellow fever, that horrible scourge of humanity, has passed over our country, sweeping thousands of souls from off the stage of action. Go to Grenada. The new-made graves tell us forcibly that the epidemic played havoc among the inhabitants thereof. Let us go to New Orleans. We are struck with astonishment when we learn of the terrible inroads the disease made among her people. But when we come home we can not restrain the sympathetic tear for our fallen people. Memphis, poor stricken Memphis! How many of thy cherished inhabitants fell victims before death's stalwart squire! We can view the effects of this terrible scourge by a visit to the potter's field, which tells the mournful tale. There are, we might say, an unlimited number of little hillocks crowded together, side by side, not yet adorned by a single sprig of grass, or decorated by the opening petals of the odoriferous flowers, which send their sweet-scented aroma over the silent city of the dead. Yet, the yellow fever has brought its heroes. Side by side stands the name of Butler P. Anderson and John G. Lonsdale as heroes of the nineteenth century. History will lavish upon them her choicest blessings, and coming generations will ever weave chaplets of flowers to decorate their silent tombs. Can not we all say, requiescant in pace.
